COMPLAINT

1. Plaintiff is a resident of Georgia who was visiting Anchorage, Alaska at the times complained of.
2. Providence Health & Services is a corporation doing business in Anchorage, Alaska as Providence Alaska Medical Center.
3. Anchorage Fracture and Orthopedic Clinic, PC is professional corporation offering orthopedic surgery services in Anchorage, Alaska.
4. John Lapkass, MD and Kenneth Thomas, MD are orthopedic surgeons employed by Anchorage Fracture and Orthopedic Clinic.
5. In September of 2018, plaintiff came to Alaska to visit her daughter. On arrival she twisted her knee and sought medical attention. She was referred to Anchorage Fracture and Orthopedic clinic where it was determined that she needed a knee replacement, a total knee arthroplasty.
6. On October 31st, 2018 Dr. Lapkass performed the knee replacement surgery at Providence Hospital.
7. Following surgery, plaintiff developed an infection in the knee. On November 7th, 2018 plaintiff returned to Providence Hospital with excess drainage from the surgical site and extreme pain. She was seen on November 8th, 2018 at Anchorage Fracture and Orthopedic Clinic with symptoms of an infection, but an infection was not diagnosed or treated. Again, on November

9th, 2018 she visited Providence with continued drainage and extreme pain and was told that this was a symptom of the surgery. She was seen again at Providence on November 15th, 2018 with more symptoms of an infection, but the infection was not diagnosed or treated. On November 17th, 2018 she was seen at Providence Hospital where the infection was diagnosed.

8. On November 18th, 2018, Dr. Thomas performed surgery to remove and replace a component of the arthroplasty and to treat the infection with incision and debridement.

9. On November 28th, 2018, plaintiff was discharged from the hospital. Before being discharged she fell, when no one came to assist her when she was leaving the bathroom.

10. On December 4th, 2018, she was readmitted for another surgery by Dr. Lapkass. During this surgery Dr. Lapkass found that plaintiff's quadriceps tendon had been damaged and speculated that this had been caused by her previous surgery or the fall in the hospital.

11. Following the December 4th, 2018 surgery, plaintiff developed another infection, which required yet another surgical procedure. And she was, again admitted to Providence Hospital.

12. On February 1st, 2019 another surgery was performed to remove her knee arthroplasty and place an antibiotic spacer. During this surgery it was discovered that plaintiff had a complete quadriceps tendon tear at its midsubstance and there was a large lateral retinacular disruption.

13. On February 6th, 2019, while being discharged from Providence Hospital a Providence employee was wheeling plaintiff out of the hospital and bumped her leg into something, which fractured her femur.

14. The fractured femur necessitated another surgery.

15. Defendant Providence Alaska Medical Center was negligent by allowing plaintiff to become infected, by failing to diagnose and treat the infection, by not providing assistance to plaintiff when she fell and by breaking plaintiff's femur.
